For the first time in the series, we use our own version of Arma 3's engine. A combination of new textures and reconstruction of the island has allowed us to improve the game play at the same time, giving us the possibility to create levels that are more complex than before. This game introduces new weapons like the SMG, BK-712 and the FABO, which allows players to play as two different teams at the same time. ACTIVATED. 2.5 years ago. . Earlier this month we introduced the new mod, ACTIVATED. It is aimed at those with a limited

I have an std::array of int, and I need to convert it to a C array of int. How can I do this? A: There's no standard library function to do this, unfortunately. You can try something like // C++ code std::array a = {...}; // Manually create an array int *array = new int[a.size()]; int i = 0; for (int &i : a) array[i] = a[i]; // Then destroy the array delete [] array; // Or you could use 'std::copy' std::copy(a.begin(), a.end(), std::back_inserter(array)); // 'std::memcpy' is also an option std::memcpy(array, a.data(), a.size()); Or you can use 'boost::multi_array', but I'd recommend not worrying about arrays in these small situations. A: You could convert the array to a std::vector and then use cbegin()/cend(). I'm pretty sure the C++ standard library doesn't have functions to do this, but boost::begin() and boost::end() are functions to do this. A: Use a standard library template for converting a range to a C array: #include <template void array_to_c_array(T (&array)[N]) { std::cout Q: Looping Spinner through android code I am wondering if there is a possible way to loop a Spinner through my code. The reason why is, that i have multiple Spinner with different options and i don't want to create different listeners for every spinner. So my idea was that i can just loop through every sp e79caf774b
