Enjoy..Q: Testing for Type or generic class in .Net using the JVM Using the JVM, it's possible to test for a type or a generic class like this: (new Object() as String).isInstanceOf(ArrayList.class); This works like a charm, but, I've been trying to search for a more official way to test for types and generics in .Net. I've stumbled on the System.Type class, but it seems to require casting. Is there any better way to do this? EDIT: This is currently the only way I've come up with, but it doesn't feel right: public class TestedClass { public static void main(String[] args) { List list = new ArrayList(); System.out.println(list instanceof List); System.out.println((list as ArrayList).isEmpty()); } } A: You can create a TypeFactory that "knows" what a List is (returns just the list and you still get its contents). You can then use Type.IsInstance() method to check if the type is List or an instance of List. The advantage is that you can still use isEmpty(). class TypeFactory { // In reality, this could be a TypeSpecifier, // which you would have to parse and make sure // is a List. public Type Get(string name, int flags) { int flags2 = 0; d0c515b9f4
